

Medical Assistance

Einstein Community Center

Neighborhood	The old north - the southern part
Additional Uses	Leisure activities, culture, art, and enrichment for all ages, alongside classes and regular annual activities.
Point Type	Central Coordinates several programs that integrate different communities.

Tool    Addition

Buildings with certain uses in the city allow additional uses and a variety of users to integrate into them. Community centers are spread throughout the city and are significant focal points for all residents of all ages and will naturally contain other communities as well.

The addition is permanent and is located in a continuous passage with the street, on the ground floor of the community center, allowing the user a choice.

The additions consist of design elements that characterize a 'soft architectural language' such as a water trough and a floating roof that enables natural ventilation, allowing for a multi-social encounter.

About

The Einstein community center is located between Frug and Dov Hoz streets in the north of the city. From the beginning, the building had an educational significance. It was used as an oriental youth home, a boarding school, and a vocational school for girls. Today it serves as an active community center with many uses and participants every day, and its goal is to be the public house for the residents of the area.

There is a lack of response and immediate medical assistance in the city. Participants with mobility difficulties and difficulty facing the law are often left without a way out in this context. The layout of the existing community centers in the city allows a natural connection to the field of medical assistance since they are intuitive community central points.

